Submission: I worked for [REDACTED] as an constituent adviser for approximately [REDACTED]. My supervisor rarely spoke to me and instead sent emails criticising my work from about 6 feet away. I was told that everything I did was basically to get [REDACTED] re-elected. I was shocked about the lack of professionalism, and the lack of commitment to ethical standards, in comparison to my previous experience as a solicitor [REDACTED]. I cannot recall having any significant conversations with [REDACTED], and felt unable to raise any concerns with [REDACTED]. I was employed on a casual basis and ended my employment very quickly on the basis of pay rate, but the real reason was due to the treatment I received from the supervisor which I had never before experienced in my professional life. I have since returned to the legal profession and never intend to return to work in an electoral office.
